The International Classification of Functioning Disability and Health ICF from the World Health Organization represents a major shift in healthcare. It looks at health not from the perspective of disease, disorder, or injury but from the perspective of how a person's health fits in with the rest of his or her life, the kinds of things the person does, and the environment the person lives in. This is what recreational therapists have been saying all along. About the Author: Heather Porter is a faculty member in the Rehabilitation Sciences Department at Temple University in Philadelphia, PA. She has a strong clinical background in inpatient and outpatient physical rehabilitation and has been teaching recreational t
